

COTTON KINGS OPEN AUDITIONS

MONOLOGUE TWO - "THE PLAN"

Right. Before anyone starts panicking, it is not a crime.

Not yet, anyway.

We go in, we keep our heads down, we buy a couple of things so we look legitimate, and then we leave.

Simple.

No running. No shouting. And absolutely no one tries to be clever.

Because the moment someone decides they're the star of the show, that's when it all goes wrong.

People get nervous, security gets interested, and suddenly I'm explaining to some bloke with a moustache why there are six jackets under my jumper.

Again.

We are not criminals.

We are entrepreneurs operating in a difficult economic climate.

There's a difference.

And before you laugh, people want this stuff. They'll queue around the block for it.

We're just helping supply meet demand.

So get your face straight, stop sweating and act like you belong there.

Because that's the whole trick.

It's not about being rich.

It's about looking like nobody would dare question you.
